If you can get to a command prompt, try: chcp 1252 That will set the "code page" to a more standard set of characters (if you are used to CP-1252 for example). If it works, then try opening a command prompt as administrator (right click 'Run as administrator'), and type: "c:\yourdrive\filename.bat" If that fails, you may have to mount the drive in question as a drive in a command prompt. The steps to do this are on the command prompt: cd //this is the drive letter of the drive you want to mount attrib -h -s -r /dev/sda1 mount -t ntfs-3g /dev/sda1 //this is an optional step to format the drive to a valid filesystem Then, open a command prompt as administrator and enter "cd c:\yourdrive\filename.bat" If you have access to the Windows Disk Management tool, you can delete the drive letter you named as /dev/sda1 and then re-add it. You can then re-create the command prompt with "cd c:\yourdrive". If that command succeeds, try to open the file again. Q: How to unzip a compressed file on iPhone? I need to unzip a file that is stored on the phone as a compressed (zipped) file. The problem is that i don't know which SDK version has the library for zip files. Anyone knows if it is possible to unzip? Thanks. A: Use the Quartz library. There's a 'ZipArchive' class included, which should be able to do the job. [Neurological complications in rheumatoid arthritis]. Neurological complications are a major cause of morbidity and mortality in patients with rheumatoid arthritis (RA). Neurological manifestations of RA are commonly the result of cerebrovascular events, while other disorders are quite rare. The classification of neuropsychiatric manifestations of RA has been proposed by the ACR in
