Q: Slow query and semisync performance in SQL Server What are all the possible reason that make a particular query runs slow? I have one large query that takes about 50 minutes. Both the tables are having same number of rows. Could it be because of other processes running on the same server? Is it because the table is in the memory or disk? I have tried this query using SQL Server Management Studio and the query takes about 1-2 mins to execute. I also tried the same using TSQL and it takes about 7-10 mins to execute. A: Ok, I think I figured it out. SQL Server runs the queries through memory and the same queries executed through TSQL were executed through the actual database. So it is due to a query running in memory and not using the actual database. So, I changed the database into a schema that is not running in memory. I also changed the schema into a memory table. The query ran in about 5-10 mins. First of all, yes I'm going to be doing mini-reviews on films for the coming year. I'm not going to
