This project will determine the role of the endothelial injury in the induction of NOS in a rat model of hypercholesterolemia. The project will examine how various biochemical and morphological states alter NOS levels and other NOS-dependent microvascular properties after injury. Specific aims are to: 1) examine endothelial and smooth muscle NOS content in animals in various types of atherogenic and non-atherogenic atherosclerotic lesions;2) examine the blood flow response to endothelial denudation in various types of atherogenic lesions and in different vascular beds;3) examine the interaction between endothelial and smooth muscle NOS expression and induction by endothelial injury and identify the principal cytosolic protein(s) that induces NOS under these conditions;4) evaluate the effect of specific treatments on NOS and microvascular reactivity in models of endothelial and smooth muscle injury;5) examine the role of NO in wound healing in the arterial microvasculature in normal and atherogenic animals.The Court of Queen's Bench has approved a $5.5-million settlement of a class action lawsuit on behalf of immigrant students who alleged the University of Ottawa was negligent in its handling of sexual assault complaints. The university had previously announced that students could not get legal representation or scholarships for free in the case because they were going against the province's laws on legal representation. A statement from the university said more details about the settlement would be released on Monday. "The University of Ottawa has always been committed to providing a safe and secure campus environment for all of its students," it read. ♦
