A window on top right is present to let you do so. "Compulsory Culture" is a new 20-page comic coming to a comic shop near you. I designed and laid out this comic for publication as a Graphic Organizer (a.k.a. G.O.), which is like a training manual for a cultural secretary and trainer of your own. 1. A G.O. is any one of many traditional, easily accessible techniques that increase a person's and an organization's knowledge and efficiency, and have been proven to be successful. (They are why "Group Therapy" is one of the first things you learn in graduate school). 2. A G.O. is designed to be used in both the non-profit world (factory workers, corporate employees, teachers, etc.) and the for-profit world (corporations, consulting firms, law firms, nonprofits.) All they do is help people learn how to get and keep more things done. Some of them help people think about the world differently, and engage in new kinds of collaboration and negotiation. Others help people understand how to work in groups more effectively. 3. A G.O. should be like one of those strangely shaped rocks that forms when sand is very, very wet (you know how it looks, even if you've never seen it in nature) and there's a sudden gush of river water. You can't describe it with words, so just have a look for yourself. In my mind, G.Os are like gigantic, interactive, fun, enthusiastic, brainstorming-friendly mind maps, where groups can collaboratively brainstorm and learn together. 4. A G.O. is a kind of educational technology: a technology that teaches a large number of people how to become more productive. There are many different kinds of G.Os, but they all share 3 primary characteristics: (1) it's fun and enjoyable, (2) it's designed to enable groups of people to collaborate and learn together, and (3) it's designed to be used over a long time, typically many years, by many different groups, for any number of different purposes. The ideal G.O. meets all of the following criteria: 1. It's easy to carry
