In Python, generators will yield in the following cases: we iterate over a for-loop. we iterate over a while-loop. we iterate over a generator that does a yield statement. So, in my example, can someone please explain the 'yield-dictionary' to me? It has already been clarified to me that it has a 'long' form and a 'short' form. But in this case, it is just a generator with a for-loop that is yielding. It is correct that the second clause yields in my example? A: What does this g construct in conjunction with the for loop actually do? It is the equivalent of g = (i for i in range(10)) for x in g: # no need for a separate variable do_something(x) Indeed, the g variable is just a "dictionary
